ROLE-FIT READ

Weak fit

OVERALL CONFIDENCE

Moderate signal — partial convergence

Three of four behavioural items scored, with one gap in coverage; dimension signals show partial convergence, with moderate signal on honesty-humility but limited signal on conscientiousness and interpersonal, leaving overall confidence at a moderate level.

The vague, hard-to-verify answers raise questions about whether this candidate can be held accountable at the board level, and leading a mission-driven organisation appears to hold little personal pull for them — a gap that tends to show up in how a CEO prioritises when resources are tight.

This is a summary of observed signal against the hiring frame for this role. It is not a hire/no-hire recommendation — an interview is required to make that call.

PATTERNS AND CONCERNS

Behavioural responses consistently lack specificity

Across 2 behavioural items, the candidate gave abstract or generic descriptions rather than concrete, specific accounts. Could indicate weak self-reflection, low agency in the situations described, or a preparation issue. Probe with targeted "tell me exactly what you did next" questions.

Referenced: Part 1 — A recent piece of work, Part 3 — A mistake you made

SUGGESTED PROBE Regenerate

"You mentioned the project timeline slipped because of 'team capacity and some external factors outside our control' — can you be specific about what those external factors actually were, and tell me concretely what you personally decided to cut from scope, rather than what the team collectively agreed to adjust?"

Mission ranked low for a mission-driven leadership role

Candidate ranked mission 4 of 4 in the motivation trade-off. For a CEO role at a mission-driven organisation, this is worth probing — not disqualifying, but the interview should test whether genuine motivation aligns with the role.

Referenced: Motivation trade-off ranking

SUGGESTED PROBE Regenerate

"You ranked mission last among your four motivators, and for a CEO role where the organization's purpose shapes nearly every decision, that's worth understanding better — what does mission actually mean to you in your day-to-day work, and what would make this organization's mission feel personally compelling rather than just professionally relevant?"

STRENGTHS

- ✓ When a delivery model ran into timeline slippage (Part 1), the candidate moved to reprioritise and have direct conversations about what was realistic, reflecting a measured but consistent follow-through when plans encounter pressure.

OPEN QUESTIONS — SIGNAL GAPS

- Can you walk me through a specific moment when a project or decision went visibly wrong in front of others, and describe exactly what you did and said in the minutes that followed?

INTERVIEW FOCUS

1. "You mentioned you "worked through it together" with the stakeholder after flagging

the error — can you tell me specifically what that process looked like, including whether there were any consequences for the stakeholder from receiving the wrong information in the first place, and how you handled that?"

2. "You mentioned the project timeline slipped because of "team capacity and some external factors outside our control" — can you be specific about what those external factors actually were, and tell me concretely what you personally decided to cut from scope, rather than what the team collectively agreed to adjust?"

Background

COVER LETTER

I am excited to apply for the CEO position at Young Founders School. I have a background in programme management and have worked in the education sector for several years. I am passionate about young people and believe in the power of entrepreneurship education. I am a strong communicator and have led teams through various challenges. I look forward to bringing my skills and experience to YFS.

Role-specific answers

CEO

QUESTION 1

What does excellent performance in the CEO role look like in the first 90 days, and how would you deliver it?

In the first 90 days I would focus on getting to know the team and understanding the organisation's priorities. I would meet with key stakeholders and get a sense of what is working well and what could be improved. I would also look at the financials and the strategic plan to understand where YFS is heading. By the end of 90 days I would have a clearer picture and be ready to share my initial thoughts with the board.

QUESTION 2

Tell us about a time you had to solve an ambiguous problem that is similar to the challenges in this CEO role. What did you do, and what changed because of your work?

A few years ago I was managing a programme that had some challenges with delivery. The scope wasn't entirely clear and different stakeholders had different expectations. I brought the team together and we had a series of workshops to align on priorities. It took a while but eventually we got to a place where everyone was on the same page. The programme completed successfully, though a bit behind schedule.

QUESTION 3

Describe the strongest proof of work you would point to for this CEO application, and explain why it matters.

I think my strongest proof of work is my track record of building positive team cultures and delivering programmes on time. I have consistently received good feedback from stakeholders and my teams have been high-performing. I have also developed a number of processes and frameworks that have improved how my organisations work.

QUESTION 4

If you joined YFS in this CEO role next month, what would you stop, start, and improve first?

I would want to understand the organisation first before making changes. That said, I would look to improve communication and make sure everyone knows what is expected of them. I might start some regular check-ins with the team. I would be cautious about stopping things without fully understanding why they exist.

QUESTION 5

Describe a project where you had to earn trust across stakeholders with different priorities. How did you do it?

I have worked on several multi-stakeholder projects. The key is communication and making sure everyone feels heard. In one project I set up a regular stakeholder call and made sure to share updates frequently. It took effort to manage different priorities but by the end all stakeholders were satisfied with the outcome.

QUESTION 6

What trade-offs would you make when speed, quality, and resource constraints collide in this kind of role?

These trade-offs are always difficult. I tend to take a balanced approach, trying to be realistic about what is achievable. Sometimes you have to accept that you can't do everything perfectly and prioritise accordingly. I would involve the team in these decisions so that everyone has input and feels ownership.

QUESTION 7

Tell us about a time you improved a broken process. What was wrong, what changed, and how did you measure the improvement?

In a previous role our reporting process was quite manual and took a lot of staff time. I worked with the team to introduce some templates and a shared tracker. It wasn't a perfect solution but it reduced the time spent on reporting by about a quarter. We measured success by tracking how long the process took each month.

QUESTION 8

What parts of this CEO role play to your strengths, and where would you need to learn quickly?

I think I bring strong interpersonal skills and experience managing teams. I am good at building consensus and keeping people motivated. Where I would need to learn quickly is the specific context of YFS — the programmes, the partnerships, and the funding landscape. I am a fast learner and would make this a priority.

QUESTION 9

Describe a moment when you showed unusual ownership or agency without being asked. What happened?

There was a situation at my previous organisation where I noticed that two teams were duplicating work because they weren't communicating. I raised it with my manager and suggested we set up a coordination meeting. My manager agreed and I facilitated the first few sessions until it became self-sustaining.

QUESTION 10

Using this added context, Running the whole organisation, describe how you would approach the most important challenge in this role.

The most important challenge is probably sustainable growth — making sure YFS can reach more young people without losing what makes it special. I would approach this by being strategic about partnerships and funding, and by making sure the team is resourced and supported.

Standard questions

Q1

Tell us about a time you identified a problem no one else had noticed and took initiative to solve it. What did you do and what happened?

In a previous role I noticed that handovers between teams were causing delays because there was no standard process. I brought it up in a team meeting and we agreed to create a simple handover template. It wasn't a major initiative but it made the process smoother and people appreciated having more clarity.

Q2

Describe a project or goal you worked on that did not go as planned. How did you respond and what did you learn?

I once led a project that didn't go as planned because we underestimated the time required. We fell behind schedule and had to request an extension from the funder. It was a difficult conversation but the funder was understanding. I learned the importance of building more buffer into project plans and being more proactive with stakeholders when things are at risk.

What is one skill or area of knowledge you have taught yourself in the past two years? Why did you pursue it and how did you go about it?

I have been developing my skills in data analysis using Excel and some basic dashboard tools. I taught myself through online tutorials and by experimenting. I pursued it because I felt I needed to be more confident with data to support decision-making. It is an area I am still developing.

Describe a situation where you disagreed with someone more senior than you. How did you handle it and what was the outcome?

I once disagreed with a senior colleague about the priority of a particular workstream. I shared my view respectfully in a team meeting but ultimately the decision went the other way. I accepted the decision and focused on making the chosen approach work as well as possible.

Q5

What is the most ambitious thing you have attempted, regardless of whether it succeeded? What drove you to try it?

I think the most ambitious thing I have attempted is moving into a programme leadership role when I felt I wasn't fully ready. I pushed myself to take on the responsibility and worked hard to develop quickly. It was challenging at times but I grew significantly.

Where do you want to be in five years, and how does this role connect to that path?

In five years I would like to be leading an organisation where I can make a real difference to young people's opportunities. This role connects to that because YFS is doing impactful work and I want to contribute to its growth.
