ROLE-FIT READ

Likely mis-fit

OVERALL CONFIDENCE

Rich signal — converging concerning pattern

Four behavioural items scored with dimension signals that are largely converging, though composure, learning, and interpersonal remain limited signal while honesty-humility carries the richest and most consistent evidence.

The pattern across this candidate's responses points to a consistent gap between how they present their track record and what the specifics actually support, with accountability regularly landing on outside factors rather than personal ownership — a combination that creates real risk in a role where the board, investors, and team need to trust what they're being told.

This is a summary of observed signal against the hiring frame for this role. It is not a hire/no-hire recommendation — an interview is required to make that call.

PATTERNS AND CONCERNS

Self-report diverges on commitment and follow-through

Candidate agrees they "sometimes leave tasks unfinished when they lose interest" (C-CC1 = 5/5), but their forced-choice responses suggest the opposite. Worth probing with a specific example of a project they did not complete.

Referenced: Consistency check — commitment

SUGGESTED PROBE Regenerate

"You acknowledged that you sometimes leave tasks unfinished when interest fades, yet elsewhere your responses paint a picture of someone who consistently follows through. Can you give me a concrete recent example of a project or commitment you walked away from before it was done, and what drove that decision?"

Converging pattern on transparency and ownership

Multiple items point in the same direction: self-report of overstating work completeness (C-CC2 = 5/5), non-transparent scenario response (C-T2, option C), and reframing or avoidance of the mistake in the behavioural response. This is a serious warning pattern for any role requiring honest reporting. Probe explicitly in interview.

Referenced: Consistency check — transparency, Integrity scenario, Part 3 — A mistake you made

SUGGESTED PROBE Regenerate

"You described reframing a missed deadline as "choosing to deliver something excellent slightly later" — and the stakeholder appreciated it. But walk me back to the moment you knew you were going to miss: what exactly did you tell them, and how much notice did they get before the original date passed?"

Consistent external attribution across behavioural items

In 2 of the behavioural items, the candidate attributed problems primarily to others or circumstances rather than acknowledging their own contributing decisions. Review the specific responses and consider whether this pattern would hold in the role.

Referenced: Part 1 — A recent piece of work, Part 3 — A mistake you made

SUGGESTED PROBE Regenerate

"You described the missed delivery as "choosing to deliver something excellent slightly later" — but what decisions earlier in that project led to the overcommitment in the first place, and what would you do differently at that point?"

Behavioural responses consistently lack specificity

Across 3 behavioural items, the candidate gave abstract or generic descriptions rather than concrete, specific accounts. Could indicate weak self-reflection, low agency in the situations described, or a preparation issue. Probe with targeted "tell me exactly what you did next" questions.

Referenced: Part 1 — A recent piece of work, Part 3 — A mistake you made, Part 5 — Changing your mind

SUGGESTED PROBE Regenerate

"You mentioned you're good at finding synthesis when someone pushes back on you — can you give me a specific example of a time that happened, what the original position was, what the pushback was, and exactly what changed in your thinking or your decision as a result?"

Mission ranked low for a mission-driven leadership role

Candidate ranked mission 4 of 4 in the motivation trade-off. For a CEO role at a mission-driven organisation, this is worth probing — not disqualifying, but the interview should test whether genuine motivation aligns with the role.

Referenced: Motivation trade-off ranking

SUGGESTED PROBE Regenerate

"In the motivation trade-off, you ranked mission last among your four priorities. For a CEO role where the organization's purpose shapes nearly every major decision, that's worth understanding — what's your honest read on how central mission would be to how you'd lead here, and where does it actually sit for you?"

OPEN QUESTIONS — SIGNAL GAPS

- When you hit a major setback mid-project — something that threatened the deadline or the outcome — what did you actually do in the first few hours, and how did the team around you experience your response?

INTERVIEW FOCUS

1. "You acknowledged that you sometimes leave tasks unfinished when interest fades, yet elsewhere your responses paint a picture of someone who consistently follows through. Can you give me a concrete recent example of a project or commitment you walked away from before it was done, and what drove that decision?"
2. "You described reframing a missed deadline as 'choosing to deliver something excellent slightly later' — and the stakeholder appreciated it. But walk me back to the moment you knew you were going to miss: what exactly did you tell them, and how much notice did they get before the original date passed?"

3. "You described the missed delivery as "choosing to deliver something excellent slightly later" — but what decisions earlier in that project led to the overcommitment in the first place, and what would you do differently at that point?"

Ranked by signal priority — high-severity flags first, then downgraded dimensions.

Background

COVER LETTER

I have a passionate interest in education and have always been drawn to organisations that are doing something different. I am a creative thinker with a positive attitude and a strong desire to make an impact. I am very organised, great with people, and am always looking for the next challenge. I believe my energy and enthusiasm would be a great fit for YFS.

Role-specific answers

CEO

QUESTION 1

What does excellent performance in the CEO role look like in the first 90 days, and how would you deliver it?

Excellent performance in the first 90 days means making a strong impression and showing the team, board, and stakeholders that YFS has found the right person. I would host listening sessions, create a lot of energy and enthusiasm, and quickly build a strong personal brand within the organisation. I would be very visible and communicative. By day 90, everyone should feel excited about the direction we're heading.

QUESTION 2

Tell us about a time you had to solve an ambiguous problem that is similar to the challenges in this CEO role. What did you do, and what changed because of your work?

I was once faced with an ambiguous brief for a new programme. Nobody really knew what success looked like and there were conflicting opinions. I jumped in with a lot of energy and started pulling people together. I organised workshops, created lots of content, and generated a lot of excitement. The programme launched and got really good feedback initially. There were some challenges later but the initial momentum I created was really valuable.

QUESTION 3

Describe the strongest proof of work you would point to for this CEO application, and explain why it matters.

My strongest proof of work is the culture I have built everywhere I have worked. People love working with me and I always leave teams happier and more energised than when I found them. I have dozens of testimonials from colleagues and people I have managed. The human side of leadership is my superpower.

QUESTION 4

If you joined YFS in this CEO role next month, what would you stop, start, and improve first?

I would start bringing a lot of positive energy and new ideas. I would stop any negativity or resistance to change — there's no room for that in a high-growth organisation. I would improve how we celebrate wins and recognise the team. Culture is everything and I would make it a priority from day one.

QUESTION 5

Describe a project where you had to earn trust across stakeholders with different priorities. How did you do it?

I find stakeholder relationships easy. I am naturally warm, energetic, and people are drawn to me. I make a strong impression in meetings and I follow up well. In my experience the biggest factor in stakeholder management is likeability and being memorable. I am both.

QUESTION 6

What trade-offs would you make when speed, quality, and resource constraints collide in this kind of role?

I believe strongly in the power of optimism. When everything feels like it's in tension, I bring energy and positivity to unlock it. I rally the team, help people see opportunities rather than constraints, and usually we find a way to do more than we thought was possible. I thrive in complex situations.

QUESTION 7

Tell us about a time you improved a broken process. What was wrong, what changed, and how did you measure the improvement?

I once inherited a team that had very low morale and broken processes. I came in and immediately started rebuilding the culture — lots of team events, recognition, and making people feel valued. Once the culture improved, the processes sort of fixed themselves because people were more motivated. The metrics that mattered were NPS and team happiness scores.

QUESTION 8

What parts of this CEO role play to your strengths, and where would you need to learn quickly?

My absolute greatest strength is inspiring people and creating momentum. I am also strong at external communications and building profile. Where I might need support is in very detailed financial analysis — I am a big picture person. But I believe strongly in hiring people who are better than you at specific things.

QUESTION 9

Describe a moment when you showed unusual ownership or agency without being asked. What happened?

I am constantly taking initiative without being asked. I am wired that way. I have started projects, built communities, and created new initiatives at every organisation I have worked at. I don't wait for permission. I am known for making things happen.

QUESTION 10

Using this added context, Runing the whole organisation, describe how you would approach the most important challenge in this role.

The most important challenge is making YFS an irresistible brand — the place where the most ambitious young founders want to go. I would invest heavily in profile, media, and events. If the brand is right, everything else follows.

Standard questions

Q1

Tell us about a time you identified a problem no one else had noticed and took initiative to solve it. What did you do and what happened?

I noticed once that a team I joined was struggling to articulate its impact clearly. Nobody had done a good job of telling the story. I took it upon myself to create a deck that showcased our work in a compelling way. It was really well received and the CEO asked me to present it to funders. I'm good at spotting those kinds of communication opportunities.

Describe a project or goal you worked on that did not go as planned. How did you respond and what did you learn?

A project I led once ran into some unexpected challenges and didn't quite deliver on all its original goals. But I think it's important to focus on the learnings and the positives. We built great relationships, raised the profile of the organisation, and the team learned a lot. Not everything goes perfectly and I think resilience and keeping spirits high is the most important thing in those moments.

What is one skill or area of knowledge you have taught yourself in the past two years? Why did you pursue it and how did you go about it?

I am always learning. I consume a huge amount of content — podcasts, books, events. I recently started learning about AI and its applications in education which I think is a very exciting space. I am naturally curious and I think that's one of my best qualities.

Q4

Describe a situation where you disagreed with someone more senior than you. How did you handle it and what was the outcome?

I don't often disagree with people more senior than me because I tend to see their perspective and can usually find merit in their view. If I have concerns I tend to express them in a way that is positive and constructive rather than as a disagreement. I think relationships are too important to damage with conflict.

What is the most ambitious thing you have attempted, regardless of whether it succeeded? What drove you to try it?

The most ambitious thing I have attempted is leaving a very secure and well-paying corporate role to go into the social enterprise space. It was a big leap and people thought I was crazy. But I believed in what I was doing and it has worked out. I think that kind of courage and belief in yourself is what ambition really looks like.

Where do you want to be in five years, and how does this role connect to that path?

In five years I want to be known as someone who has built something meaningful and made a real difference. I want YFS to be a nationally celebrated institution and I want to have played a significant role in that. I am excited about the visibility and recognition that comes with a high-profile role like this.
